Pamela is a Partner of BLP in Guatemala. Her practice areas include Intellectual Property, Advertising, Marketing & Consumer Protection, Cybersecurity & Data Protection.

During her seven years as a lawyer, she has advised national and international organizations in all aspects related to the registration, protection, and defense of trademarks, patents, and other industrial property rights, including the licensing of assets, litigation, and anti-piracy matters. Recently she has been known for her work advising, from copyright and intellectual property perspective, the most disruptive technology companies for the introduction of innovative business models to Central America.

Pamela has significant experience managing strategies for sanitary registrations, analyzing from a legal perspective the advertising materials, commercial promotions, and other consumer protection matters, including the attention to claims before the corresponding authority.

she also has assisted companies in data privacy matters, ranging from prevention audits preparation of notices and privacy policies, training of personnel, and legal defense against complaints.

The prestigious publications Chambers and Partners, Legal 500, and World Trademark Review have recognized her work. The first of these publications describes her as a key figure in the firm's Intellectual Property practice who is highly esteemed among clients for her technical knowledge and assertive response in complex cases.

She joined the BLP team as an associate in 2016, after having been Director of the Intellectual Property Practice at Arenales & Skinner-Klee - LatamLex for one year, and working eight years at Palomo & Porras, seven years as a legal assistant and one as an associate.
